

This little boy was "discovered" in a barber shop. Although young in years, Bobby Driscoll's talents have made millions laugh and cry at his drollery.

(Formerly known as those difficult days, those certain days or just "those days")

Tampax users may agree on the superiority of this method of monthly hygiene, but their reasons vary widely.

GLORIA SAYS: "I CAN GO IN SWIMMING" Yes, Tampax is internally worn, without external belts, pins or pads. You don't feel it when in use and you need not remove it for your shower, tub or swim!

BETSY SAYS: "DON'T NEED A DEODORANT" Right you are, Betsy! With Tampax no odor can form and there are other comforts too. No chafing. No bulges. Quick changing; easy disposal...

LUCILLE SAYS: "IT RAISES MY MORALE" Tampax relieves embarrassment at such times. So dainty and efficient that millions of modern women have adopted it. For sale at drug stores, notion counters, in 3 absorbencies.

HELEN SAYS: "A DOCTOR STARTED IT"... Doctor-invented Tampax is made of pure surgical cotton compressed in dainty applicators. So compact that your purse holds a full month's supply. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Bobby Driscoll

● "You ought to be in pictures" is an oldie usually reserved for luscious blondes. The retort proper, by anyone hep-to-the-line, is: "Oh yeah?"

By no stretch of the imagination could Bobby Driscoll fall into the above category. Nevertheless, Bobby had the peculiar sensation of being on the wrong end of a rib one Saturday afternoon when his barber gave him a fast reading of this line. His parents paid little attention to the tonsorial expert's comments, however. Bobby's father just smiled and inspected the haircut more minutely. When Bobby's mother had passed judgment on the clipping job, they both agreed that there was really no need for this particular barber to butter up his customers. So Bobby kept going to the same barber, in spite of the fact that each week he began to sound more and more like a broken record.

Then one day the barber's son, Earl Kent, was visiting from Hollywood. He talked to Bobby and asked him to read a few lines. In five minutes Mr. Kent was making with enthusiastic sounds and had set up an appointment for Bobby to see his agent. Mr. and Mrs. Driscoll were still skeptical. When the day came for the interview, they decided that gas (it was rationed then) was too scarce for a wild goose chase.

Mr. Kent, a patient man, set up another appointment for them, and this time he issued the ultimatum, "You must go!" So Mrs. Driscoll and Bobby made the long jaunt from Alameda to the agent's Westwood offices. Bobby talked to the agent, read a few lines, and was dismissed. Mrs. Driscoll returned home feeling very foolish but wiser for her experience. Bobby had enjoyed the ride.

Ten days later came a phone call to report to MGM, where Bobby distinguished himself and embarrassed his mother by asking the director why there wasn't any water under a boat on the set. Because of this, he won a small part in "Lost Angel."

From then on Hollywood producers regularly found work for Bobby. Remember Al in "The Sullivans"—the little fellow who took communion with a shiner on his left eye? Then there was "Sunday Dinner for a Soldier" in which Bobby, again the showoff, took top honors for whistle blowing while standing on his head. After that came "Identity Unknown," "The Big Bonanza," "Miss Susie Slagle's," and "From This Day Forward." About this time, Walt Disney discovered Bobby and put him under long-term contract. His first picture with the animated animals was "Uncle Remus;" after that he was lent to Universal to play with Don Ameche and Myrna Loy in "So Goes My Love."

In this last picture Bobby has many dramatic scenes in which he must actually cry, and his mother has the task of putting him in the mood for these scenes. An insight to Bobby's character is the type of story Mrs. Driscoll tells him to bring forth the genuine tears. Just before a particularly dramatic scene of "So Goes My Love," when the lighting had been set and the camera ready-to turn, Mrs. Driscoll called Bobby off the set into his dressing room. While Don Ameche, the director, the cameraman, and some 30 odd members of the crew waited in silence, Bobby's mother told him a story. A few minutes later he emerged, tears streaming down his face. The director called "Roll 'em." The scene was shot once and printed.

LITTLE WOMAN

The story? Bobby's mother explained to him that his stand-in (who's been with Bobby on every picture so far) may not grow just the same height as Bobby and there was a probability that perhaps on Bobby's next picture they just might possibly have to get another stand-in. That did it. The floods were unleashed, for Bobby is the soul of loyalty and his stand-in is his best friend.

Bobby's loyalty even extends as far as his eating habits. What else but corn on the cob could be the favorite food of an Iowa? Bobby was born in Cedar Rapids just nine years ago last March, the only child of a school teacher mother and a businessman father. Because of Mr. Driscoll's ill health, the family moved to Alameda, California, when Bobby was about three. Then came the fateful haircut that changed the lives of these three people. Bobby's picture career started, the Driscolls necessarily had to move to Hollywood, where Mr. Driscoll is now in the insulating business, and Mrs. Driscoll spends most of her time on the set with Bobby, when he is working. When not making pictures Bobby's attending public school, where he is in the fourth grade.

The Driscolls are anxious that Bobby should have the same type of life enjoyed by other children of his age. They are careful to see that he develops interests outside his picture work. They don't want him to be set apart by his schoolmates as being "different." So far, they have no worries on that score, for Bobby's inquisitive mind is eager to eat up knowledge in all fields of endeavor. Right now his class at school is studying astronomy, and every clear night Bobby has some "new" constellation to show his dad. Boxing and pool playing are also enjoyed by father and son alike, and like most boys, during his quieter moments, Bobby collects stamps and does clay modeling.

Saturday afternoon usually finds him at the Hitching Post Theatre cheering his favorite western star, "Wild" Bill Elliott. Incidentally Bobby receives $1.00 a week allowance, and out of this he usually takes his girl friend, a school chum, to the show. He admits she isn't too much company in the theatre, however, because "she keeps her eyes closed when the shooting starts."

Bobby's favorite actress is Peggy Ann Garner, with Roddy McDowall taking honors in the male division. His idol? Bing Crosby. It's his fervent desire to be in a picture someday with Bing.

He's also an avid radio fan. On his list are such thriller-dillers as "Dick Tracy," "Buck Rogers," and "Superman." His favorite show, however, is less on the blood curdling side. It's "Let's Pretend," a Saturday morning children's show.

Right now, Master Driscoll is awaiting his Tom Mix magic ring, for which he has sent in one box top and a dime. And to prove further that he's just all regular boy, he does not aspire to become the Van Johnson of 1960. His ambition? To get a steady job with the FBI.

The End

It is Sharon's first dance recital, and she is wearing an air of insouciance. Mrs. McManus thinks that Sharon is not paying attention, that surely she has forgotten her steps. But as Sharon approaches the middle of the stage, she is transformed from the three-year-old tot that mother sang to sleep last night to the polished performer.

Father Flanagan was in the audience that day. Having recently returned from Hollywood, the good father was in a talent conscious mood. He saw the spark of something near to genius in Sharon's dancing, and persuaded her mother and father to let him do something about it. Consequently, when Sharon's family moved to California a few months later, she was immediately placed under long-term contract to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Short subjects, such as "A Great Day Is Coming," "Little White Lie," and "Amber Returns," were Sharon's first assignments—to get her accustomed to the intricacies of movie-making. By the time she became Gene Kelly's dance partner in "Anchors Aweigh," she had become so adept that she all but stole the scene right out from under the educated Kelly tap shoes. When a Hollywood movie critic was asked if she remembered the little girl of the dark pig-tails, the critic replied, "A little girl? I thought she was an angel dropped from the sky, on order of Gene Kelly."

And that's how Sharon impresses most people. There is an ethereal quality about her delicately formed face and her large, expressive brown eyes. Sharon is very much of this world, however, when she turns her piquant little face your way and sounds forth on her views of life, love, and careers for women.

She is serious when she talks to you about her school work and her classmates in the studio school (Maggie O'Brien, "Butch" Jenkins, Elizabeth Taylor et al). When questioned about her favorite class period, however, she replied, unhesitatingly: "Recess." Though her voice be grave and her eyes wide and deep, you know there's a twinkle just below the surface.

She's much too fond of fun to take her schoolwork too seriously. Until recently she had a great deal of trouble with her arithmetic. That is, until "Butch" initiated her into the mysteries of "take-aways"—subtraction to you. She is now attacking them with a vengeance, trying to beat him at his own game. For if "Butch" gets to feeling too superior, he might rescind his statements of affection rendered under a Texas moon. (They were making "Boys' Ranch" together then.) At that time Sharon's reply to the $64 question was "Murder!" But upon thinking it over in the cold light of day, she decided that here was a man with a future, and besides he could help her with take-aways. It remains to be seen if the romance lasts through logarithms.

When Sharon isn't in school or before the cameras, you're apt to find her at a riding academy, mounting a standard size horse (despite her 47 inches). Her father has promised to give her a pony, but so far none has been found with the necessary requisites—gentle but fast.
